

Interface allows people to search for green jobs online

March 9 -- Looking for a green collar job?

A new service at www.greenjobspider.com will allow people to search more than 50 green job boards currently on the Internet through one interface. The site also will help job seekers learn about different types of green jobs and their locations through a blog and podcast.

"The time is right for a service of this kind," says Chris Russell, the green jobs search engine's founder. "Green jobs are growing and the current method of finding them is too fragmented."

Russell is a 10-year veteran of the online job search space. His company, AllCountyJobs.com LLC, is a well-established player in the niche job board business.
